BUCKLEY GRAY YEOMAN

AUTHOR: DAVID TAYLOR

London-based practice Buckley Gray Yeoman was formed in 1997. The practice's diverse range of work includes housing, industrial buildings, office new build and refurbishments, master planning and work in the education sector, all with a focus on sustainability, quality and innovation.

Continued. follows the first publication on the practice's work, To Be Continued, published by Black Dog Publishing in 2005, which looks at the variety of Buckley Gray Yeoman's work from a range of perspectives, drawing on the disparate influences and interests on the practice's engagement with contemporary design. Continued. takes on the story as it was left in the first volume.

Buckley Gray Yeoman offers more than a conventional architectural service. Aiming first to understand the core values of its clients, through aspects including business model and branding, the practice offers a problem-solving approach to architecture that results in creative solutions beyond the obvious. This latest publication from Buckley Gray Yeoman looks at the variety of the practice's work from a range of perspectives, drawing on its varied interests in contemporary design.
